But it's in shorter supply every year. Those who own these skills stand out. I believe that more people could join this group—and I write my books, teach and give workshops to share this know-how. Good writing is not "a way with words"! It's about good thinking, and knowing how to read people. My books demonstrate an all-purpose system based on these truths. They show you how to understand other people's perspectives and strategize every message to succeed. They give you a wide resource of professional tricks of the trade and shortcuts that empower you to keep improving the content and quality of all your communication: email, letters, reports, proposals, blogs, scripts, presentations, websites, blogs, resumes and use of social media. Even if you've never felt confident as an academic writer, I know you can successfully learn to be a practical, goal-oriented writer. I know this because first I taught myself by many years of trial and error. Working as a national magazine editor, journalist and corporate communicator, I figured out what works. Then I developed a step-by-step structure that applies to every kind of media—written, oral and visual. My message: Good writing equips you to get what you want more often. It helps you achieve your own long-range goals. It sharpens your problem-solving, collaboration and leadership skills. It encourages people to see you as more authoritative, persuasive and trustworthy. It enables you to build better relationships and bring out the best in other people—and yourself. One thing we know for sure from writing this book is that Facebook loves change. The folks at Facebook love to change things up — tweak the platform; upgrade programs; and above all, innovate each chance they get. This is great for everyone who's looking to use Facebook to grow a business but not so great for anyone who's writing a "how things work" book about Facebook marketing. On Facebook, how things work one day may not be how things work the next day! Please make a comment if the link is not working for you. I appreciate your valuable comments and suggestions.
